SOCIAL SECURITY

BY: MARY BOOKER

Are you 65 or older and still working? If so, have you visited your social security district office? It is possible that you and your family may be eligible to receive some social security benefits even though you continue to work after you are 65.

Because of recent changes in the social security law, there are approximately 1 million persons 65 or older who would be able to collect some payment despite their earnings, in order to receive any benefits, however. These people must first file claims at the social security office.

Before 1961, a person eligible for social security benefits could not receive any benefits if his total earnings for the year amounted to more than $2080 and iff during the year he either earned over $100 a month wages or rendered substantial services in self-employment in each month.

Beginning with 1961, the amount a person can get in benefits when he works after he files a social security application depends on his yearly earnings and on the amount of benefits payable to him and his family. A person who earns $1200 or less during the year can get all his benefits. This is the same provision as was in effect before 1951. Also, a person can get a social security check for any month of the year in which he neither earns wages more than $100 nor renders substantial services in self-employment. This is true despite the amount of his total yearly earnings. A person 72 or older can receive all benefits due on his past wages regardless of how much he work and earns.

For further information on how earnings affect benefits is available at your local social security office in Lynchburg, Va. Many working people over 65 will find it to their advantage to file reports so any applications even though they have earnings from employment or self employment.

your social security representative will be in the Court House in Appomattox on the Fourth Monday of each month at 10:00 a. m. to 12:00 noon.
